This car is for sale in Germany - look at the asking price in the link.

The car has a dent in the passenger door from opening it too far and hitting the edge of the rear fender. The dealer believes that he can get a high price, because the car is so rare.

According to the dealer in Germany, the car sold for over 200,000 Euros, which is good for our car values.

Agreed; that's a good price (if actually achieved). What had he been asking for it, Hermann?

One always wonders what the real price actually was, more so with car dealers, who are inclined to talk the price up.

Pictures look nice, but one needs to see it in the flesh to get a feel for the car and what has been done and look at its prior history.
