

Lagondaforum: Part identification required

Part identification required

Written by davidbracey at Jun 19, 2021 6:39 am

Anyone recognise this? Found it on the driveway and it looks suspiciously filthy and worn to have dropped from a Lagonda! Can't see where though. About 2" long.

---

Attachments:

E0D7B25A-4634-4270-8F4F-5F1666F6A543.jpeg (filesize: 89.18 KB)

---

Re: Part identification required

Written by h14 at Jun 19, 2021 11:06 am

It appears to be a lever which pivots about a central pin, with the fork moving something with a recess machined in it. Can't identify it, but it's operation might help you narrow down where it might go. With no hole/attachment evidence on the lever section, the implication is that it is operated manually, and located somewhere oily!

Laurence

---

Re: Part identification required

Written by davidbracey at Jun 19, 2021 11:47 am

Yes, that's exactly my thought. On the same wavelength. It looks so typically Lagonda and yet might be entirely unrelated.

Thanks for confirming my thinking.

---

Re: Part identification required

Written by DavidLG45 at Jun 20, 2021 11:06 am

Hi David,

Not a part that I recognise. . . .

---

Re: Part identification required

Written by davidbracey at Jun 20, 2021 2:36 pm

Thanks David.

It could have dropped off any number of pieces of machinery I've got.

I'll find out eventually.

David

---

Re: Part identification required

Written by davidbracey at Jun 22, 2021 12:15 pm

Having just driven the car for 15 miles I've reached the conclusion that it's unrelated to my Lagonda.

What a relief.

David

---

Lagondaforum: Part identification required

Re: Part identification required

Written by Julian at Jul 09, 2021 10:37 am

Hi David,

That is a ToggleWidget, it is used for getting owners very worried when actually they have nothing to worry about 🤔 🤔

Nothing Lagonda that I have ever seen, and I recon I have seen most things Lagonda.

Jules

---